

RECLAIMING AND HOLDING THE BOUNDARY

Knowledge is not power or empowerment, when that knowledge is based on a conditional reality that requires your agreement and attention in order to be maintained. Human beings are creative by nature, not only within our externalized imaginations and manifestations, but within our very essence, we are made of creative energies. Taking responsibility for what we create with our imagination is an act of great personal empowerment.

It has been the case for thousands of years that the co-creative union between the male system and the female system has been out of balance, generating predominant social patterns in which the male desires have been manifested, and the female desires have been dismissed as unworthy of being fulfilled.

The roots of this pattern are within the misunderstanding between men and women occupying a chemical manifestation within the human brain; this misunderstanding is related to concepts of “fault” or “original sin” in which our human natures are blamed for this imbalance. Releasing the lies within social conditioning describing human nature as faulty, lies that are frequently carried within the field of science which was researched from a limited viewpoint shaped by “original sin,” is a way to bring about the internal alchemy that transforms the relationship between the male system and the female system within oneself.

The energetic immunity to pedophilia is based on respect for boundaries over the private property and personal territory of individuals; it is based on an awareness of when you have stepped into someone else’s world, and using self-restraint and self-control to avoid entering into areas where you are not welcome. The vibrational frequency range of pedophilia includes the energies of colonialism and appropriation, consumption of the sacred or intimately private areas of a human being’s relationship to oneself or to the body of life on earth without their permission; it is a theft, a spoiling of purity, an act of irreverence and disrespect.

The modern inventions of internet, e-mail, social media, GPS, and other new technologies have globalized communications in ways that have outpaced the delicate sensitivities of human beings’ reception of data; it is often assumed that to participate in email means the boundary of privacy has been forsaken in the face of the ease of sharing off the platform of consent. It is our social trends, the culture that we shape with our choices and our drumbeats that form the mass agreements about what is socially acceptable and what can get a person kicked out of their tribe.

The American Psychological Association has authorized a definition of mental illness which excludes the patterns of colonialism, appropriation, exploitation, and sadism; this is due to the gender-bias discrimination inherent in sociology, evolutionary biology, science, medicine, law, religion, institutions and infrastructure within a male-dominated society. Psychology will be upgraded to a higher level of effectiveness and accuracy when the lens of gender-bias discrimination is identified and removed.

It is entirely possible for the APA to create a panel of female licensed psychologists to review this issue of gender-bias discrimination within the practice of psychology, and to put forth their recommendations on modifying the definitions of mental illness to be expanded to include what the human race had previously believed they lacked the strength to reject as unhealthy.

There is a built-in permission within much of our social conditioning for humans to be violent, as it is viewed as "survival of the fittest," while the competition for resources is considered "natural selection." For some people raised within the male gender role, they were taught by society what it means to be a man, what it means to be masculine, is to dominate, control, take by force, and consume. Therefore, these males are quite proud of themselves to have engaged in violent theft, as they believe it makes them at the top of the food chain. This false pride could not exist without the authorization of the DSM that there is nothing sick or dysfunctional about their behavior. It is the fabric of society itself that is required for a shift in consciousness; we must change our minds, and allow this shift to be represented in the DSM-VI.

When we agree that, "It's just the way it is," or "boys will be boys," or "it's a jungle out there," we have chosen to accept a Black Plague of consciousness as a way of life simply because it has proliferated. Human beings are on an evolutionary journey, with each generation being born faster and smarter than the generation before. Simply because pedophilia has plagued the human race for many thousands of years does not mean it cannot be successfully quarantined. It used to be that human beings did not understand the importance of sanitization; now, sanitation is a way of life.

It is very, very easy and accessible for a grown adult to pick up a 2 year old child and shake the baby until that person sustains brain damage or becomes brain dead; this does not mean it is legal, ethical, acceptable, or should be considered as a risk factor of survival because it's a jungle out there. "It's a jungle out there" is a lie; the jungle is within each human being who is responsible to themselves and their communities for their choices. Polar bears do not live in tribes in which they cooperate together in order to gather food and build shelters. Human beings are interdependent and require participation from other human beings in order to stay alive; thus we are responsible to each other to respect the private property of other human beings.
