

THE 21 MILLION DOLLAR LIE

Emily Doe was not raped by Brock Turner.

Someone else was raped by Brock Turner. In this lifetime, Brock Turner has not committed felony rape, which is a classification of crime upon adult victims, but he has committed felony child sex abuse and felony predatory assault against a child.

Emily Doe was a secret employee of the Obama Administration in the years 2008-2016. She lied about being raped by Brock Turner as a part of a political game.

It is against the statutes of the press to ever publish a story about sexual violence done to an adult or child, even anonymously, without the consent of the victim or the victim's guardians. It is truly against the protocol of the press to do that, and would constitute harassment towards the victim of sexual violence if they did.

I had to question if any laws were broken as a result of the Emily Doe sexual assault first being published on national television without her knowledge or consent, as this crime against decency was so profane. Certainly what the press did to Emily Doe had to be against the law. In fact, there were two felonies as defined by California Penal Code that were broken in relation to the Emily Doe sexual assault being published in the news, but those felonies took place before 2016.

It began with Brock Turner's trip to France during Thanksgiving vacation in November 2014. Brock Turner and three of his friends got caught participating as "customers" of human trafficking. Prior to raping children in France, Brock Turner had participated as a "customer" of human trafficking in Japan, Italy, and the Netherlands in 2014. When Brock Turner got caught breaking the law in France, he went to jail. He was in jail for less than 72 hours. His parents went to bat for him, and it got political. This led to international diplomacy in which several different countries were involved in a bet. The governments of the United States, Japan, France, England, Netherlands, Russia, Italy, Greece, and Poland all got involved in making a bet that had to do with press coverage, and this bet was illegal. California Penal Code 214 was broken when this international wager took place, and many other laws were broken as well.

The governments of the United States, Japan, France, England, Netherlands, Russia, Italy, Greece, and Poland all engaged in a bet that was a competition over which country could rape the highest percentage of their country's virgins aged 0-16 in one year's time. The United States won the bet, with the highest percentage of their country's population of virgins under the age of 16 being raped. 758,282 permanent residents of the United States who were virgins under the age of 16 years old were raped during the year 2015.

The reward of this bet was that a story about a high profile figure date raping and getting away with a slap on the wrist would be published around the world as an advertisement for human trafficking in the country that won the bet.

The governments of the United States, Japan, France, England, Netherlands, Russia, Italy, Greece, and Poland have participated in this international wager from 1989-2018. 1989 was the first year that the government of the United States entered into an international competition over how many of their country's population of virgins under the age of 16 years old they could rape in one year.
