

Dear “Mr. Man,”

You are not a real person; you are a symbol of oppression within my imagination. You only hold as much authority as what I give. Each human being suffers the tyranny of the collective ego that exists both within their own minds and the social policies of the world outside. I have words for you. These words are not just for me, these words are for every female and every male who has endured the oppression of patriarchy.

Mr. Man, it is time for your slave fantasies to be recognized for what they are. It is time for you to admit that Creator did not manifest all life on this planet and billions of human beings to be characters in your world that revolves inside you. Their lives were created to serve your desires, as much as your life was created to serve their desires.

Mr. Man, I do not suffer from delusions of grandeur to know my worth to be respected as a credible source of information, to know my worth to be paid thousands of dollars to provide lectures to physicists, biophysicists, and psychiatrists who have a level of education and work experience that exponentially surpasses mine to an astronomical degree. It is about market worth, the value of services, and understanding that the transmission of knowledge from me is an investment into the advancement of the respective fields of sciences they work to develop.

The lecture on the Anti-Life particles is a heavy subject which will not be taken in off the platform of respect.

Women are not delusional, crazy, mentally ill, or wrong to believe themselves worthy of reciprocity, prosperity, and safety upon the platform of a career built upon deepening their relationship to their own body and to nature. The human body is not the enemy of the human mind; nature is not a harsh beast to be mastered and tamed.

Your assertion that violence is the master of the human realm is a big fat lie. Your assertion that no human being has the birthright to be safe from any harm even as they walk without defense, delicate and easily crushed as a flower, this is a standard based on an unresolved wound. Violence does not rule the human realm; it plagues it.

The issue with a male-dominated society is that both women and men accept values based on esteeming the male principle and degrading the female principle. Work, activity, productivity, this expression of “yang” is respected as a worthwhile application of one’s time and energy. Rest, stillness, reflection, listening, recharging, healing, these expressions of “yin” are not respected as a part of earning one’s keep in society, but viewed as laziness, self-indulgence, or worthless as a contribution to the greater good.

I have expended a lot of time researching the nature of reality and the human condition in an invisible library; I made myself available to listen deeply to my spirit for as many hours as people with a Ph.D. have expended reading the words of those educated before them. This application of my time and energy was not free; it was drawn at a cost to accomplishing up the socio-economic ladder to earning a high salary, yielding a non-material return on my investment.

Studies conducted from the left hemisphere of the brain are as valuable as right-brain applications of study.
