

RECLAIMING AND HOLDING THE BOUNDARY

Knowledge is not power or empowerment, when that knowledge is based on a conditional reality that requires your agreement and attention in order to be maintained. The altered-domain is like a balloon with a tiny hole in that it constantly needs to have air blown into it by you in order to maintain its shape; it is also like a stock exchange involving investments of belief, attention, and emotional energy that perpetuates human suffering; for example, every time you agree to the lie that money = personal worth, or that physical appearance dictates your value as a human being, or that humans are the center of the universe, you invest into a world of illusion built on the values of the altered-ego.

Human beings are creative by nature, not only within our externalized imaginations and manifestations, but within our very essence, we are made of creative energies. Taking responsibility for what we create with our imagination is an act of great personal empowerment.

It has been the case for thousands of years that the co-creative union between the male system and the female system has been out of balance, generating predominant social patterns forcing the male desires to be perverted, and the female desires to be dismissed as unworthy of being fulfilled.

The roots of this pattern are within the misunderstanding between men and women occupying a chemical manifestation in the brain; as per biology of belief, this misunderstanding is related to concepts of "fault" or "original sin" in which human nature is seen as the cause of this imbalance. Releasing the lies within social conditioning describing human nature as faulty, lies that are frequently carried within science which was researched from a limited viewpoint shaped by "original fault," is a way to bring about the transformation of the relationship between the male system and the female system within yourself.

The energetic immunity to becoming infected with pedophilia after surviving sexual abuse is based on pre-natal chi, or what some may consider to be pre-destined by karma. Yet the very existence of karma guides us back into a pattern of conscious co-creation with Source; I can only imagine how Clotho, Lachesis, and Atropos would wring their hands in vexation that we would believe karma to be something other than encouragement for learning about consciously manifesting our own destinies. People who have become infected with pedophilia are not chained to a fate they have no escape from; the future is constantly in motion and unpredictable.

Anti-pedophilia energy includes respect for boundaries over the private property and personal territory of individuals; it is based on an awareness of when you have stepped into someone else's world, and using self-restraint and self-control to avoid entering into areas where you are not welcome. The vibrational frequency range of pedophilia includes the energies of colonialism and appropriation, consumption of the sacred or intimately private areas of a human being's relationships to oneself or to the body of life on earth without their permission; it is a theft, a spoiling of purity, an act of irreverence and disrespect.

The modern inventions of internet, e-mail, social media, GPS, and other new technologies have globalized communications in a way that has outpaced the sensitivities of human beings' reception of data; it is often assumed that to use email or social media profiles means the boundary of privacy has been compromised in the face of the ease of sharing off the platform of consent. It is our social trends, the culture that we shape with our choices that form the mass agreements about what is socially acceptable and what can get a person kicked out of their tribe.

There is a built-in permission within much of our social conditioning for humans to be violent, as it is sanctioned as "survival of the fittest," while the competition for resources is sanctioned as "natural selection." For some people raised with the male gender role, they were taught by society that being a real man requires them to dominate, take by force, control, and consume. Therefore, these males are proud of themselves to have engaged in violent theft, as they believe it places them higher up on the food chain. This false pride could not exist without the authorization from the DSM books that there is nothing sick or dysfunctional about their behavior. Nowhere in any of the DSM books is there any description of physically violent behavior as a symptom of pathology. It is the fabrics of society itself that are necessary for a shift in consciousness; we must change our minds, and allow this shift to be represented in the DSM-VI.

When we agree that, "It's just the way it is," or "boys will be boys," or "it's a jungle out there," we have chosen to accept a Black Plague of consciousness as a way of life simply because it has already taken over. Human beings are on an evolutionary journey, with each generation being born faster and smarter than the generation before. Simply because pedophilia has plagued the human race for many thousands of years doesn't mean it cannot be successfully quarantined. It used to be that human beings did not understand the importance of sanitization; now, sanitation is a way of life.

It is very, very easy and accessible for a grown adult to pick up a 2 year old child and shake the child until that person sustains brain damage or becomes brain dead; this does not mean it is legal, ethical, or that it should be allowed as a risk factor of survival because it's a jungle out there. "It's a jungle out there" is a lie; the jungle is within each human being who is responsible to themselves and their communities for their choices. Polar bears do not live in tribes in which they cooperate together in order to gather food and build shelters. Human beings are interdependent and require cooperation from other human beings in order to stay alive; thus we are responsible to each other.

The American Psychological Association has authorized a definition of mental illness which excludes the patterns of colonialism, appropriation, exploitation, and sadism; this is due to the gender-bias discrimination inherent in sociology, evolutionary biology, science, medicine, law, religion, and all other institutions and infrastructure within a male-dominated society. Psychology will be upgraded to a higher level of effectiveness and accuracy as the lens of gender-bias discrimination is identified and removed.

Furthermore, religious discrimination is institutionalized within the classification system of the DSM-5, in that anyone who believes in magic has a symptom of mental illness called "magical thinking." According to the diagnostic criteria of the DSM-5, a Christian could be diagnosed as having Delusional Disorder for believing that Jesus Christ walked on water, performed miracles, and rose from the dead; only if a large enough group of people share this same belief and it has been institutionalized as a formal religion that sanctions rape and promotes male superiority, it is no longer considered bizarre or pathological.

It is entirely possible for the APA to authorize a panel of female licensed psychologists to review this issue of gender-bias discrimination within the practice of psychology, and to put forth their recommendations on modifying the definitions of mental illness to be expanded to include what the human race had previously believed we lacked the strength to reject as unhealthy.
