

BUSINESS PROPOSAL

Chelsea M. Wright is a health consultant working exclusively to fight against sexual violence. She uses muscle-testing to identify violent sex offenders who have abused their positions of employment to promote sex crimes. Her private investigative services are provided for the purpose of initiating and facilitating police investigations. She offers statistical analysis through anonymous census for institutions, identification of employees who have committed sex crimes during their employment with the institution, and a screening service for new hires.

SCREENING

The criterion for screening employees who have broken the law or who may be participating in systematized sexual violence is based on both criminal history and mental health. A person who has not committed any violent crimes may choose to sanction the crimes committed by their co-workers based on their own inclination towards violence. Employees who have not broken the law but who are following a “don’t ask, don’t tell” policy sanctioning violence can be identified with a mental health screen.

Pre-employment screens for new hires are completed within 48 hours of ordering the report. The date of birth is the only identifying information used for crime checks, mental health screens, and pre-employment screens.
